Resident Profile...Jack Atlee

John "Jack" Atlee was born in Morristown, New Jersey in 1918. His father, the first in a family of ten to be college educated, was a civil engineer building railroads through the Appalachian mountains. His dream of becoming an independent farmer led him to buy a vegetable farm in South Florida in 1926, but economic realities forced him to give it up. He went on to manage a wealthy man's estate in the Florida woods - a nice place to grow up, with plenty of woods to explore and a lake where Jack and his younger brother were able to build boats and fish.

Jack lived there through high school, then enrolled at the University of Florida, "within hitchhiking distance" of his parents' home. But his mother had bigger plans for him. At her urging, he transferred to Harvard for two years. However, Harvard did little to satisfy his strong interest in social justice. Jack took a year off to study cooperatives and work in a factory and a government office. He then went to the University of Chicago, where he earned his undergraduate degree and co-founded a documentary film group that still exists. He flew as a bomber navigator in World War II, and eventually completed a Ph.D. in economics at Columbia University.

Jack taught economics at several universities before becoming an independent economist. The Depression and WWII had centered his life on preventing war and fascism and promoting true democracy. To this end, he focused his research on developing the concepts and tools for "maintaining a stable, full-employment economy."

He has continued this passion into his 90s, and keeps up with the news, but also finds peace sitting in the sun in The Cambridge Homes' garden, finding "the spot where the sun hits just right."

SENSUALITY WITH SINEW Studying Character in New England

PHOTOGRAPHS BY
ROBERT LOREN LERCH
July 6 - September 4, 2011

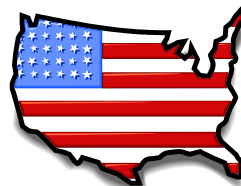

Opening Reception July 12, 5:00 - 7:00pm

Self-reliance, dignity, stoicism, a sense of propriety - these and a few other traits are famously found in and around New England.

There is an interesting relationship between people and the places they choose to inhabit. The places are changed as a result, and the people themselves become changed.

The things tell the stories. There are photographs of some of those things in this book, and a few scenes of the places where they are found.
